Nicky Epstein GOES GLOBAL

 From Iceland to Peru: Nicky went to the ends of the world for these inspired designs

"I loved bounding (literally and figuratively) from Scotland to Iceland to Japan to Sweden to Russia to Latvia and around the globe, designing pieces inspired by some of the knitting marvels that these lands have produced," says celebrated knitwear designer Nicky Epstein. And you'll love making—and wearing!—her gorgeous collection.

Legend has it that Catherine the Great was so delighted with her Orenburg lace shawl ("a shawl so fine that the entire thing could be slipped through a wedding ring") that she went to sinister lengths to ensure that no other woman would be able to wear something so exquisite. Luckily, she failed and now Nicky's reworked this design into a lovely St. Petersburg Camisole for everyone! Then there's Nicky's take on the flapper fashions that sparked a frenzy in France, her ultra-feminine restyling of the Spanish Matador jacket and her unique interpretation of the textile designs of the Navajo.

With more than 40 fabulous projects, Nicky celebrates the knitting traditions of the Far East and the Far North, the Old and New worlds, the Mediterranean and the wind-swept islands alike, introduces all sorts of techniques to try, and spins a pretty good yarn along the way!
